PROBLEMS OF SELF-DISCOVERY AND SELF-DIRECTION

By M. E. BENNETT

Director of Orientation, Pasadena Junior College, and Director of Guidance, Pasadena City Schools

and H. C. HAND

Assistant Director Carnegie Guidance Study, and Assistant Professor of Education, Stanford University

171 pages, 8½ x 11, paper. $1.50

This important manual of problems and exercises for freshman orientation courses aims to help the student to (1) discover his abilities, his personal characteristics, and his need for development; (2) formulate life plans more purposefully; and (3) make the most of his college experiences in preparing himself for a wholesome, happy, and useful life. The material is planned with the same realistic insight and understanding that made Bennett's College and Life so successful, and is designed to supplement that orientation text. The manual may, however, be used as an independent workbook.

This pamphlet gives valuable suggestions to guide the instructor in obtaining the best results from Bennett's College and Life and Bennett and Hand's Problems in Self-discovery and Self-direction. The material is divided into three parts: General Suggestions Relating to the Entire Course, Suggestions for Specific Units and Problems, and Objective Tests and Suggestions for Their Use.

College and Life

"This book is well organized and well written, and contains information which is exceedingly valuable in the orientation of college courses."

DEAN H. J. HOKE,
College of William and Mary

"I think Professor Bennett has presented an excellent guide for persons facing the problem of orienting themselves in college life."

DR. HARRY D. KITSON, Teachers College,
Columbia University

"Of books on college orientation, it is the most carefully prepared, the most stimulatingly written, and altogether the most valuable that has come to my attention."

PROFESSOR EDGAR E. ROBINSON,
Stanford University
